Problem Statement

- Problem Statement:

- In our society, there is a concerning lack of interest in visiting tourist places, engaging with cultural heritage, appreciating art, and participating in community spaces. This trend poses a significant challenge as it leads to the neglect and underutilization of valuable cultural assets, hindering the preservation of our collective history and identity.

- The declining interest in these aspects can be attributed to various factors, including changing leisure preferences, limited accessibility, inadequate promotion, and a lack of engagement opportunities tailored to modern audiences. As a result, cultural sites and community spaces remain underappreciated and fail to fulfill their potential as vibrant hubs of social interaction, learning, and cultural exchange.

- Addressing this problem is crucial not only for the preservation and promotion of our rich cultural heritage but also for fostering a sense of belonging, pride, and connection within our communities. By reigniting interest and engagement in tourist places, culture, heritage, art, and community spaces, we can revitalize these important assets, stimulate economic growth, and enhance the overall well-being of society.
